1.0 PURPOSE

- 1.1 The purpose of this report is to provide Committee members with information about the proposed plan to raise awareness of the Independence Referendum in schools for pupils who will be 16 or older at the time of the referendum (September 2014).

2.0 SUMMARY

- 2.1 The Scottish Independence Referendum (Franchise) Act 2013 was passed by the Scottish Parliament on 27 June 2013. The Act extends the entitlement to vote to young people who will be 16 or older when the referendum is held on 18 September 2014.
- 2.2 As a consequence of the extension of the entitlement to vote we have a responsibility to support young people to understand the referendum process and to support them in registering and in becoming familiar with the electoral process.
- 2.3 This report details an approach to ensure that young people are supported in participating in the referendum and have an opportunity to hear from the respective campaign groups BETTER TOGETHER and YES SCOTLAND.

3.0 RECOMMENDATION

- 3.1 The Education and Communities Committee is asked to agree the proposals to raise awareness of the Independence Referendum in schools in order to support young people who will be eligible to vote at the time of the referendum.

Albert Henderson
Corporate Director of Education, Communities and Organisational Development

4.0 BACKGROUND

4.1 The Scottish Independence Referendum (Franchise) Act 2013 was passed by the Scottish Parliament on 27 June 2013.

The referendum will be held on 18 September 2014.

Voters will be asked to respond with either a "YES" or "NO" to the question "Should Scotland be an independent country".

The Scottish Independence Referendum (Franchise) Act 2013 extends the entitlement to vote to young people who will be 16 or older when the referendum is held.

As a consequence of this extension of entitlement to vote there is a need to assist young people currently attending secondary schools, and who will be eligible to vote when the referendum is held, to understand how to register to vote and more generally how to exercise their vote.

There is also a need to ensure that there is parity of access to the new school aged voter constituency by the respective campaign groups BETTER TOGETHER and YES SCOTLAND and that the day to day running of schools is not affected by campaigning activities.

The Electoral Commission launched its public awareness campaign on 1 October 2013. All public awareness materials are available to download from www.aboutmyvote.co.uk. A young voters registration form is available as part of these resources.

All secondary schools have been issued with the Curriculum for Excellence Briefing Paper No 14 entitled 'Curriculum for Excellence: Political Literacy' (see Appendix 1). This briefing provides information and guidance for teachers regarding the broad theme of political literacy and also details the benefits of using contemporary events, such as the independence referendum, to promote political literacy. Young people undertaking National Qualifications in Modern Studies will also engage with learning on political literacy within their core curriculum.

5.0 PROPOSALS

5.1 It is proposed that:

- The Head of Legal and Democratic Services will arrange for the Electoral Commission to visit schools in February/March 2014 to address school pupils who will be 16 or older by 18 September 2014. The purpose of these visits will be to provide information on the registration process and to explain the voting process to young people.
- A couple of 'Question Time' sessions be arranged in the Greenock Town Hall for pupils involving representatives from the respective campaign groups BETTER TOGETHER and YES SCOTLAND during the period June/August 2014. The format of these events will be a 'Question Time' style debate where young people will have an opportunity to express their views.
- Discussions will take place with secondary Head Teachers to get their view on the best time for these events.
- Guidance for schools and other Council establishments regarding visits by politicians will be updated to include guidance on the independence referendum.

6.0 IMPLICATIONS

6.1 Finance

There is likely to be a cost associated with running 'Question Time' events such as Let costs.

6.2 Legal

There are no legal implications

6.3 Personnel

There are no personnel implications

6.4 Equalities

All young people who will be entitled to vote at the time of the referendum will have the opportunity to learn about the electoral process and engage with the 2 campaign groups.

7.0 BACKGROUND PAPERS

Curriculum for Excellence: Political Literacy

Scottish education is going through a period of transformation that will affect all learners. Approaches to the curriculum, learning, teaching, assessment, awards and qualifications are all changing. Education Scotland is supporting change by evaluating evolving practice and sharing it nationally to inform discussion and promote innovation. This briefing explores the place of political literacy within Curriculum for Excellence. It relates to all settings where children and young people experience aspects of political literacy, either in an educational establishment such as a college or school, or more broadly in a wide range of community settings and forums.

1. What is political literacy?

In CfE, political literacy is central to citizenship education. It is the particular combination of attributes and capabilities, skills (including higher-order thinking skills), knowledge and understanding that helps learners to become responsible citizens and to participate in society's decision-making processes. Political literacy is one of the foundations of modern democracy and its guardian. It is the means by which citizens make informed choices about the kind of society they want to live in. It helps everyone to understand political decisions and how they affect their own lives. It is the vital set of attributes and higher-order thinking skills that enables evidence and reasoned debate to trump unsubstantiated assertion and hyperbole. Political literacy matters in a society whose values<sup>1</sup> are wisdom, justice, compassion and integrity, one which demands equalities and fairness for all, and one which cherishes the right of every citizen to make up and express her/his own mind.

2. Where is political literacy in CfE?

CfE defines the purposes of the curriculum as the four capacities and political literacy is firmly embedded in them. For example, successful learners should be able to ‘make reasoned evaluations’. Confident individuals need ‘to develop and communicate their own beliefs and views of the world’. Responsible citizens should be able to ‘make informed choices and decisions’, whilst effective contributors will ‘apply critical thinking in new contexts’.

Many of the attributes within the four capacities underpin political literacy. These include, for example, ‘openness to new thinking and ideas’, ‘secure values and beliefs’, ‘commitment to participate responsibly in political, economic, social and cultural life’, and ‘resilience and self-reliance’. Higher-order thinking skills such as knowing, understanding, analysis, synthesis and evaluation help learners to make up their own minds and express their own views. Political literacy promotes equalities through positive values such as empathy and respect for others.

Experiences and outcomes (EOs) describe the more detailed contexts for learning about political literacy. The EOs are used to build progression in how children and young people learn to become politically literate, beginning in the early years.

3. What are the features of effective learning and teaching in political literacy?

The combination of attributes, capabilities, skills, knowledge and understanding mentioned above describes what needs to be learned. CfE also gives practitioners and learners the space to plan learning in a way which best meets learners’ needs. This means that practitioners will continue to use and build on a wide range of approaches in different classrooms, establishments and other settings. These approaches typically include discussions, debates, voting, topic work and interdisciplinary studies, personal research and reflection, the use of partnerships including visits and visitors, and ‘learner voice’, amongst others. Here are some features of effective practice in these approaches.

How do you ensure that all views are represented in discussion over time?

Discussions take many forms and are widespread across the curriculum. Skills in discussion are developed in everyday situations as children and young people learn many of the behaviours and practices from each other. This is where listening skills come to the fore and when children and young people learn to respect, value and recognise each other’s views. In the early years, issues tackled are those of immediate relevance and are often raised by the children themselves. With older learners, issues for discussion are often set by the practitioner through reference to a range of contrasting perspectives and evidence. Sometimes, learners themselves will initiate issues or be asked to introduce topics and assemble evidence from different sources to inform discussion. These approaches are important because they give learners the space to develop the attributes, capabilities and skills of political literacy in depth. Practitioners are well used to ensuring that contrasting perspectives are explored so that learners can come to an informed view based on evidence and reason. Here are some of the features of good discussion.

- If consensus is achieved, it is done through negotiation, compromise and use of evidence.
- Participants feel safe when expressing views, asking questions and when agreeing to differ.
- Everyone feels comfortable to participate and that they are listened to and their contribution is valued.
- Participants are open to new ideas and ways of thinking, can decide to agree or disagree and can explain their own views.

Debates may be structured more formally than discussions and provide an organised context for testing issues and opposing views. Characteristics of effective debates include:

- a well thought-out proposition;
- balanced inputs which reflect each perspective and which are based on evidence;
- clear and well understood ‘rules of engagement’; and
- a strong emphasis on developing presentation skills through oral communication.

Voting, elections and mock elections are widespread and take place in many different contexts. At the earliest stages, children may vote on pieces of nursery equipment they wish to purchase or charities they wish to support, with supporters of the charities making a pitch. With older learners, elections may be held

In all cases, practitioners will continue to create conditions where reasoned discussion and evidence thrive and where challenge is informed and constructive or do. As such, they take particular care not to promote any particular political view at the expense of others. They are also well versed in ensuring a balanced approach to exploring political issues by providing a blend of learning experiences over time which is demonstrably impartial. In all cases, practitioners will continue to create conditions where reasoned discussion and evidence thrive and where challenge is informed and constructive.

5. What impact do curriculum areas and subject choices have?

CfE gives all learners the opportunity to gain the skills, knowledge and understanding needed to be politically literate. Some choose to study this area in greater depth than others – they might study for a qualification in modern studies, economics, politics or sociology, for example, or for an award in Scottish studies. And those who don't also need engaging opportunities to develop political literacy. CfE enables this to happen because all young people are entitled to experience all of the EOs up to Third Level, and many of those at Fourth Level. Many of the EOs will be delivered through social studies or through areas such as health and wellbeing and interdisciplinary contexts. In languages, learners might develop a wide range of skills in talking including, for example, the use of appropriate register, as well as using contexts such as media extracts to look into important ideas such as how opinions are formed. In

RME, learners might discuss and reflect upon a range of beliefs and values which underpin political thinking and action. In social studies such as people in society, economy and business, learners might consider political and economic decisions. In mathematics and numeracy they might look at the impact of changes in taxation on prices and take home pay. In technologies, learners might apply ICT skills to research and evaluate information such as through on-line government information services, or indeed engage with social media on a wide range of topics. Learners might consider science from an ethical stance and relate this to choices made in the political world, such as decisions made about cloning, embryonic stem cell research or limits imposed on greenhouse gas emissions to curb climate change. In the expressive arts, they might explore the poster designers of the Russian Revolution or the street art of Banksy, or the social influences on Blues or punk rock, or indeed the rich history of political drama in radio, film and theatre. More broadly, learning experiences outwith the classroom can provide particularly relevant, real-life contexts. These might be in the community, or through outdoor learning, or indeed in assemblies and other gatherings. All of these contexts can help learners to develop their own political values. It is the combination of all of these CfE contexts that ensures everyone can become politically literate. And it is practitioners and volunteers who work with learners in all contexts who can ensure that political literacy is for all.

Have you considered how to respond when learners ask about your own views?

6. What next?

In taking forward political literacy in CfE, it might be helpful to consider the following questions in addition to those embedded throughout this briefing.

- Does everyone have a clear understanding of the breadth of political literacy in CfE and how it relates to different areas of the curriculum as well as, in particular, to the social subjects?
- Does everyone involved apply local guidelines which are intended to ensure balance and impartiality in learning experiences?
- Does everyone involved have access to the wide range of evidence and perspectives available to them, for example online, and do they explore all of these?
- Do learners and their parents or carers understand how practitioners deliver political literacy and how they ensure impartiality?

Does everyone involved have a clear understanding of where the attributes, skills, knowledge and understanding of political literacy are delivered?
